SATURDAY .... AUGUST 11, 1900.

The transcontinental train rolled into the town of Dodgeville, Kan., and halted at the station for dinner. A gong rang furiously, and the word "Restau rant" stood out in seductive capitals. Few passengers could resist the com- cheap. bined appeal. The rush for coffee, sandwiches and pie was quite after the hendlong style which years ago alarmed Martin Chuzzlewit. One women only hesitated, a tourist of nervous temperament. She was hungry; her lunch basket had grown odious-but might not the train go off and leave her to the mercy of cyclones and grass hoppers? She hunted up the conducto of her car and made known to him her state of famine and fear.

"Step off, madam," said the official gallantly, "and enjoy your dinner. I'll see that you don't get left."

By and by the engine began to puff asthmatically; then a bell cling-clang ed, a thousand little wheels turned and with impressive dignity the hun ger appeased train resumed its iron

The conductor of the Espanola started up from a column of war news and glanced out in alarm. He had forgot ten until then his promise-his sacreofficial promise! A woman stood on the platform waving frantically at the departing train. She looked a little stouter than the nervous woman be had promised to see aboard, but I must be she. He hadn't noticed he particularly. He wished he'd never seen her at all. With a sinking o heart he rushed into his car and looked toward No. 6, hoping against hope t see it occupied. It was, but not by the trusting woman. It held a valise, a telescope, a roll of rugs, an air pillow an umbrella, a novel or two, a lunch basket, a pair of slippers and a pug dog. He didn't see the woman's pocketbook, but it was probably shut up in the telescope-so miserable reflection suggested. And her ticket would be in tt-of course

He hurried through the forward cars as fast as he dared to go-it would not do to frighten passengers-and found that powerful personage the genera

"You must back up to the station." he gasped. "Woman left. I promised she shouldn't be."

"You should have kept your promise Smith," was the cold reply. "No use to talk. We're started now."

"But that woman," persisted the sleeping car conductor, "is a tourist. If we leave her, we'll offend her whole party. They will all come back by another route and give us a bad name Remember, our road makes a specialty of the tourist business. We must go back and get that woman. To leave her in Dodgeville"-

"Oh, Dodgeville reformed long ago." interrupted the train conductor. "It's a very good place to be left in. I a'pose, though, we'll have to go back,' he added as he gave a signal for re-versing the engine. "Of course we can't afford to offend tourists. I'll warrant," he went on in a biting tone "that woman hasn't her pocketbool with her. It's on the floor likely, under the seat. That's"-

The relived conductor walted to hear faintly familiar, upon a face that smiled at him in placid recognition. Railway powers of every line! It was the very woman for whom the train was backing to Dodgeville. He understood it all in one unhappy flash. After enjoying her dinner, as he had directed, the tourist had gone of her own volition in search of social en joyment, for here she was having an easy, joyous chat with some acquaint-

"I am trusting my luggage to your care, conductor," she said sweetly. "I'll be home presently."

For a moment the man stood irresolute. Should be turn back and explain the situation to the vexed official from whom he had just wrung an unusual concession? He decided to let things take their course. There was nothing to be gained by explanation. The train, to the bewilderment of a stretch of coaches and countryside, was already nearing the Dodgeville station. He must wait for the derision of his superior-for a more serious result pos-

He gave the smiling tourist a sour look and hurried onward. But as he advanced his face beamed with a sudden inspiration.

The train slackened, stood still, and a stout, excited woman was deftly motioned to a certain platform. She was helped aboard by a sleeping car conductor, who seemed remarkably ready for the service.

"You can just as well walk through the sleeper to your day coach," he said as the woman announced a wayside destination.

The train conductor saw from a distance this cordial reception. "Singular," he muttered, "that a through passenger would carry to dinner with her an umbrella and a valise. But there's no telling what a woman will do on trains-or anywhere else." - Chicago Times-Herald.

The Press Hard to Stop.

There is scarcely a record of any siege of importance in which the press has capitulated so long as there was a square yard of brown paper or canvas to feed it with. During the famous siege of Vicksburg in the civil war The Dally Citizen came up smiling to the very last day, when it was reduced to a diet of wall paper.

Troublesome to the Army. During the civil fwar, as well as in our late war with Spain, diarrhoea was one of the most troublesome diseases the army had to contend with. In many instances it became chronic and many instances it became chronic and the old soldiers still suffer from it. Mr. David Taylor of Wind Ridge, Green Oo, Pa., is one of these He uses Cham-berlain's Colio, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and says he never found any-thing that would give him such quick relief. Stricken Dog. Not only does the dragon symbolize to the Chinese all that is imposing and powerful, but the mass of the people firmly believe in its actual existence and its power to do harm. Therefore a good deal of their time and money i ensted in paying it propitiatory atten

A live dragon would certainly be an alarming animal to meet on a lonely roud, for a Chinese writer describes I as having a camel's head, a deer's horn, a rabbit's eyes, a cow's ears, a About the mouth grow whiskers and a beard. In the middle of the latter hangs a large pearl. It can change its breath at will from fire to water, and breath at will from fire to water, and its voice sounds like the jingling of can save you almost half as much as you spend. If a Chimman wishes for happines and peace in this world and the next he feels obliged to consult the dragot as to where his house shall be built and his grave be made. Through the earth, so say the Chinese, flow two currents, the dragon and the tiger rents. If he is to rest quietly in his grave, that also must be properly placed. So called "wise men" make a business of choosing favorable site for homes and graves, professing b neans of a wand and incantations are other kinds of tomfoolery to be able t letect the presence of the dragon and

All mandarins of high rank have a tragon embroidered in gold thread or olored silks on the front and back of their coats, distinguished, however from the imperial dragon by having but four claws. Burial of a Pet Canary. A pet canary belonging to a very de roted 12-year-old girl who lives not very far from New York died the other day of pneumonia and received a bur innals of bird obsequies.

Dick was six years older than his lit le mistress and spent half of his hap py life in singing. When the little fel low died, he was put in a silken shroud grave, and a hundsome jewel box, lined with white velvet, served for a casket All the girl friends of Dick's little mistress, Ruth, attended the funeral fressed in deep black, and the 16 dolls that were in the erect congregation wore the same somber hue. When everything was in readiness Ruth threw up a window, under which was the newly made grave, and began playing a funeral march on the plane One of the lads who assisted in the gravedigging picked up the walnut casket and here it slowly through the door. The girls followed, with their arms full of dolls. When the grave was reached, a signal was given to Ruth to stop playing, and she joined the crowd. Hymns were sung, and tributes were spoken of the dead. There was so much weeping that it was finally decided to bring it to an end by hurrying up the burial services. The body was quickly placed in th grave, and a little mound was built up

The mound is piled high with pretty pink tipped seashells, and green sod extends from the grave to a little fence
